SOM Table 1. Modern trees and shrubs (end of September/early October 2022) and archaeologically-recovered seeds from the excavation. Names follow the South African National Plant Checklist (SANBI BRAHMS Online). The infraspecific names for some taxa, (e.g. for Boscia albitrunca var. macrophylla and Pseudolachnostylis maprouneifolia var. maprouneifolia) follow Plants of the World Online (Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew). Where the subspecies or infraspecific names were not identified in the field, the genus and species were used inclusively, e.g. Diospyros lycioides. The synonym Acacia was used rather than the accepted names, Senegalia and Vachellia. Common names follow Van Wyk and Van Wyk (2012). The presence of seeds from the excavation is recorded with 'x' because quantification is not meaningful.

GENUS, SPECIES AND INFRASPECIFIC	FAMILY	ENGLISH	AFRIKAANS	ARCHAEOLOGICAL SEED TAXA
Acacia (syn. of Vachellia) erioloba	Fabaceae	camel thorn	Kameeldoring

SOM Figure 1. Woodstock Rocks: some of the upper grindstones observed on the ground surface near the cliff. A few of the grindstones have percussion marks suggesting that they may have been used for hammering as well as grinding.

SOM Figure 2. Woodstock Rocks: two of the lower grindstones observed on the ground surface near the cliff.

Right: The same image enhanced with Dstretch lds.

SOM Figure 4. Remains of one of the two bichrome eland images in the main part of the Woodstock Rocks Rock Art 1 overhang. Although the head is no longer visible, the manner of depiction implies that this is an eland.

SOM Figure 5. At Woodstock Rocks Rock Art 2 eight antelope are painted in a small alcove, north of the excavation, approximately 5 m above the ground.

SOM Figure 6. Woodstock Rocks, Square F3 South wall on bedrock, showing the position of three sediment cores taken for optically stimulated luminescence dating. The horizontal measuring tape lies on bedrock at the base of the excavation.

SOM Figure 7. Woodstock Rocks ferricrete terrace: quartzite flake.

SOM Figure 11. Woodstock Rocks ferricrete terrace: sampling ferricrete for palaeomagnetic analysis. On the right is a large Acheulean flake that has eroded from the ferricrete.
